

EDITORIAL

A good publication series cannot be easily put down! In the 2005 edition of the Torch Trinity Journal, an announcement was made to retire the journal with its original name. The good news is that TTJ is back as promised in last year's volume but with a "more global outlook" and a wider peer-review base.

The shift from a regular volume to a peer-reviewed edition was expected, considering the emergence of quality works across academic continental borders. Thus, this journal will continue to meet the emerging challenges of globalization, pluralism, and post-modernistic issues facing evangelical institutions today.

As a departure from the traditional format, this volume features thematic articles on "Theology and Context." Articles that do not directly fall under the theme are put under "General Articles" section. A special essay is placed on the first part to highlight the contribution of Professor Donald Dayton. The essay notes the relevant issues facing today's Pentecostal theology. Entries in the "Book Review" section have been submitted by Rolex Cailing, Vemuriyi Vadeo, and Neipukhrienuo Ano Peseyie, all Th.M. students at Torch Trinity.

The road that culminates in the publication of this first peer-reviewed edition was long. Special commendation goes to Lisa Pak for her efforts in proof-reading some of the essays at the initial stage of this publication. Appreciation also goes to all the reviewers from various academic backgrounds for their invaluable comments on and contributions to this volume.

As in the previous issues, this volume will be added to the TTJ archives that are already available on the school's homepage at <http://www.ttgst.ac.kr> (click on "Publications"). Request for previous issues and subscription for the forthcoming volumes should be directed to Ms. H. J. Joo, Torch Trinity periodicals librarian, at hjoo@ttgst.ac.kr. Questions or comments related to this issue should be addressed to this volume's editor at drterry63@ttgst.ac.kr. Inquiries on future contributions shall be addressed to the 2007 editor, Professor Miyon Chung, at mchung@ttgst.ac.kr.

Soli Deo gratia!
